INTRODUCTION

IN the apocryphal poem of John Rogers "unto his children," which was included in every New England Primer, he said:

"I leave you here a little booke
For you to looke uppon,
That you may see your father's face
When I am dead and gon."

No better description of the New England Primer itself could be penned. As one glances over what may truly be entitled "The Little Bible of New England," and reads its stern lessons, the Puritan mood is caught with absolute faithfulness. Here was no easy road to knowledge and to salvation; but with prose as bare of beauty as the whitewash of their churches, with poetry as rough and stern as their storm-torn coast, with pictures as crude and unfinished as their own glacial-smoothed boulders, between stiff oak covers, which symbolized the contents, the children were tutored, until, from being unregenerate, and as Jonathan Edwards said, "young vipers, and infinitely more hateful than vipers" to God, they attained that happy state when, as expressed by Judge Sewall's child, they were afraid they "should goe to hell," and were "stirred up dreadfully to seek God." No earthly or heavenly rewards were offered to its readers. The Separatists had studied their Bible too carefully not to know that a future life of bliss was far more an instinctive longing of mankind than an Old Testament promise. They were too imbued with the faith of Judaism not to preach a religion of stern justice, and the oldest Puritan literature and even laws read strangely Hebraic to nineteenth century eyes.

The religion of Christ, a faith based on love and mercy, received less sympathy and less teaching, from their divines than probably from any other sect nominally Christian. Salvation from hell was what they promised; while, to make this boon the greater, the horrors and tortures were magnified and dwelt upon; and that the terror might be the greater, God was made sterner and more cruel than any living judge, that all might be brought to realize how slight a chance even the least erring had of escaping eternal damnation.

But in this very accentuation of the danger lay the strength of Puritanism. No mass or prayer, no priest or pastor, stood between man and his Creator, each soul being morally responsible for its own salvation; and this tenet forced every man to think, to read, to reason. As the Reformation became possible only when the Bible was cheapened by printed versions, so the moment each man could own and study the Book, Puritanism began. Unless, however, man could read, independence was impossible, for illiteracy compelled him to rely upon another for his knowledge of the Word; and thus, from its earliest inception, Puritanism, for its own sake, was compelled to foster education. Probably no better expression of this fact can be found than in an order of the "General Corte" of the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, in 1647, that:

Introduction

"It being one chief piece of yeould deluder, Satan, to kepe men from the knowledge of ye Scriptures, as in former times by keeping ye in an unknown tongue, so in these latter times by pswhading from ye use of tongues, ye so at least ye true sense & meaning of ye original might be clouded by false glosses of saint seeming deceivers, ye learning may not be buried in ye grave of ye fathers in ye church & commonwealth, the Lord assisting ye endeavors, —

It is therefore ordered, ye every township in this jurisdiction, after ye Lord hath increased ye to ye number of 50 householders, shall then forthwith appoint one within their towne to teach all such children as shall resort to him to write & reade.”

Independency, no less than Papacy and Episcopacy, was able to foresee the danger of individualism in that it threatened to result in a man’s not finding in the Bible the one belief by which alone the Puritans held he could be saved. Think for himself he must, but it was his duty to think what the Separatists thought, and so churches were gathered, and “teachers”—as they were first called—were chosen, who told their congregations what they were to think for themselves. Very quickly organized sects followed, which formulated creeds and catechisms, demanded belief in them, and tortured, imprisoned and exiled the recalcitrant. Finding that other men, like themselves, could not be made by punishment to accept other than their own opinions, the children were taken in their earliest years,¹ and drilled and taught to believe what they were to think out for themselves when the age of discretion was reached. And this was the function of the New England Primer. With it millions were taught to read, that they might read the Bible; and with it these millions were catechised unceasingly, that they might find in the Bible only what one of many priesthoods had decided that book contained.

Introduction

This method of securing uniformity by uniting alphabet and creed was as old as printed books. The Enschedé Abecedarium, which has even been claimed to be the first specimen of printing with type, and which certainly was printed in the fifteenth century,¹ contained besides the alphabet, the Pater Noster, the Ave Maria, the Credo, and two prayers, being the elementary book of the Roman Church. So too, a larger book of Catholicism, for more advanced students, was the well-known "Book of Hours"; which, translated from the Latin text into English,² was called "The Prymer of Salisbury use," and was printed as early as 1490. need hardly be said there are many later editions of both these works.

When the Reformation began to work among the people in England, among its signs was the appearance of unauthorized primers, and Henry the VIII. issued “proclamations” and “injunctions” against these, in an endeavor to keep his people true to Catholicism. Very soon, however, he experienced a change of heart not merely towards his wedded wife, but incidentally as well, towards his mother church, and in 1534, as one method of fighting the Pope, he allowed to be prepared and issued what is known as the “Reform Primer”,¹ designed to teach his people what they should believe. In this, however, his desire to have done with the Church of Rome, led him to act too hastily, for in less than a year, he varied his belief and licensed the issue to his people of a "Goodly Prymer in Englysshe" that they might know the only true and revised-to-date religion. Yet again new light came to the head of the English church, and in a third primer, known as the "Henry VIIth Primer", the King marked out a new and only path to heaven for his subjects. All these primers contained portions intended for "beginners", such as "a fruitful and very Christian instruction for children", and since the Romish Church had a preliminary book to its Prymer, so Henry had his, called "The A B C", the earliest known copy of which contains the alphabet, the Lord's Prayer, the Hail Mary, the Creed, various Graces for before and after "dyner" and for "fyshe dayes", and the "ten commandments". The distinction between the two was well indicated by a little poem at the end of the A B C printed in black letter in 1636:

1 "A goodly Prymer in Englysshe, newly corrected and printed, with certeyne godly Meditations and Prayers added to the same, very necessarie and profitable for all them that ryghte assuredly understande not ye Latine and Greke tongues. Cum privilegio regali." [London, 1535.]

innumerable sortes, which mynister occasion of contentions and vain disputations, rather then to edify”. To end this difficulty he commanded “one uniforme ordre of al such bookees throughout al our dominions, both to be taught unto children and also to be used for ordinary prayers of all our people not learned in the latyn tong”, and for that purpose, “set furth thys Primer or boke of prayers in Englysh to be frequented and used in and throughout all places of oure said realmes and dominions, as well of the elder people, as also of the youth, for their common and ordinary prayers, willing, commandyng and streightly chargyng that for the better bringing up of youth in the knowledge of theyr duty towards God, their prince, and all others in their dege, every Scholemaster and bringer-up of yong begin-

At which time they may at their libertie either use this primer in Englishe, or that whiche is by oure authoritie likewyse made in the Latyn tong, in all poinctes correspondent unto this in Englysche." ¹

This injunction it is needless to say was little heeded. The English King could depose the vicegerent of Heaven, even though the latter was infallible, but he could not overcome the common people. Faiths and Creeds multiplied until the famous Council of Trent complained of the “infinite” number of the “little books” and complained that there had come to be “as many catechisms as there are provinces in Europe, nay, almost as many as the cities, are circulated, all of which abound with heresies, whereby the minds of the simple are deceived.” Their majesties Henry, Edward, Mary, Elizabeth and James, though each having a different faith, successively forbade, seized and burned these unauthorized books; and whipped, imprisoned or burned preachers and printers, but it was all unavailing, and a little over a century and a half from the time that Henry changed the religion of his country, the people decided that it was easier to change their King than to conform in their religion. With the flight of James II. ended all attempts to prevent the people from having such primers and catechisms as they chose, leaving behind nothing but a restriction in the printing of the Bible and the Book of Common Prayer, which to this day are monopoly books in Great Britain.

The authorized primers were not true school-books, being rather primary — hence "primer" — manuals of church service, and indeed the forerunners of the "Book of Common Prayer". Moreover they were handsomely printed, and thus were expensive. The authorized A B C, which sold at a moderate price, contained but the most elementary matter. It must have very quickly occurred to booksellers that to combine the two into one work would be a good idea, but as they were both monopoly books most printers were debarred from doing it and to the privileged printers there was no object in producing them at a low price. It was left, therefore, to the publishers of Separatist persuasion, to take advantage of the larger sale that could be obtained, and very quickly they were issuing at low prices, books which contained the sum of both; and no doubt this cheapness and convenience played a prominent part in the spread of dissent. It was this union of the A B C and the Primer, which led to children’s books being called by the latter title.

The earliest of this combination of school-book and catechism, so far discovered, is Bastingius’ “Catechisme of Christiane Religion, taught in scholes”, which had the A B C prefixed to it, and was printed in Edinburgh in 1591. In 1631 Bishop Bedell’s catechism was printed in Dublin, in the same manner. “The A B C. The Catechism: That is to say, an instruction to be taught and learned of every Childe” was printed in 1636. Ten years later the “Catechism for young Children appointed by act of the Church of Scotland” was issued with the A B C, probably in Edinburgh. In England more care had to be taken, for as late as 1666, one Benjamin Keach was tried for writing "The Child's Instructor, or a New and Easy Primer", which contained a catechism with leanings towards ana-baptism; but though the author was sentenced to the pillory, the book was constantly republished. A little later, in 1670, George Foxe issued his "Primer and Catechism" "with several delightful Things" intended to make a Quaker of the student.

One of the gravest difficulties to the early Separatists in both Old and New England, was the question of what catechism to teach their children. During the voyage of the Arbella the Puritans were catechised by their clergyman on Sunday, while no sooner were they landed than the...
Colony of Massachusetts Bay made a contract with sundry "intended ministers" for "catechising, as also in teaching, or causing to be taught the Companyes servants & their children, as also the salvages and their children",¹ and in this same year (1629) they voted the sum of three shillings for "2 dussen and ten catechismes".² It cannot certainly be known to what particular catechism these allusions refer, but it was probably the one composed by "that famous divine" William Perkins, preacher of St. Andrews Church in Cambridge, catechist for some time of Christ college, and one of the most distinguished Calvinists of the period. First printed in 1590, this catechism ran through many editions in England, was republished with additions by John Robinson for the use of the pilgrims, and later was reprinted in New England.

Very quickly after the Puritan settling in America a tendency developed towards the individualism implied by all dissent and especially by Congregationalism. As a result of this diversity of belief, Lechford states that catechising was generally abandoned in many of the New England churches, and to meet the woeful condition the “General Corte” in 1641 “desired that the elders would make a Catechisme for the instruction of youth in the grounds of religion”,¹ as well as consider “howe farr the magistrates are bound to interfere for the preservacon of that uniformity & peace of the churches”.

The request was only too readily responded to and in the period of 1641–1684 the reverend “teachers” Hugh Peters, Edward Norris, Ezekiel Rogers, John Davenport, John Cotton, John Eliot, Thomas Shepard, Richard Mather, John Fiske, John Norton, Seaborn Cotton, James Fitch, Samuel Danforth, James Noyes, and Samuel Stone, each prepared one or more catechisms. In fact it is probable that every New England minister formulated his own faith in this manner, and at first thought it would seem to have been not a little trying to a congregation, on the death of a trusted shepherd who had properly inducted them in his own belief, to get accustomed to the doctrines of a new incumbent. This difficulty was for the most part avoided by the general knowledge of what each clergyman thought, so that only one in fairly close accord with the congregation was considered. When a mistake occurred, and the “Teacher” was found to run counter to his church, they hastened to get rid of him, which resulted in the innumerable church quarrels and the schism with which New England so abounded.

Long after Cotton Mather asserted with evident pride that “few Pastors of Mankind ever took such pains at Catechising as have been taken by our New English Divines: Now, let any Man living read the most judicious and elaborate Catechisms published, a lesser and a larger by Mr. Norton, a lesser and a larger by Mr. Mather, several by Mr. Cotton, one by Mr. Davenport, one by Mr. Norris, one by Mr. Noyes, one by Mr. Fisk, several by Mr. Eliot, one by Mr. Seaborn Cotton, a large one by Mr. Fitch; and say whether true Divinity were ever better handled.”¹ As a fact, however, this very multiplicity of catechisms tended only to increase the schism and the New English clergy spent their energies in preparing catechisms and quarrelling over them rather than in attempting the “instruction of youth” and the “uni-self for so much of the disputation, was forced to acknowledge that “the excellent and necessary use of catechising young men, and novices, . . .

we willingly acknowledge: But little benefit have wee scene reaped from set forms of questions, and answers by one Church, and imposed by necessity on another”.

Not till the great Westminster Assembly formulated its longer and shorter catechisms, did the New England Churches find a common faith, and even then, as the work of Presbyterians and not Congregationalists, they were accepted only by degrees, not because they were generally approved, but because they were the only escape from a tendency that threatened to break each congregation into fractions too small for existence as a church.

SUCH was the condition of schoolbooks and catechisms, when the New England Primer was first published. Its authorship and date of issue have hitherto been mysteries which have resisted the research of all antiquarians, but it is at last possible to give the main facts concerning its origin.

In the reign of King Charles of "merrie" memory, one Benjamin Harris began printing in London "at the Stationers Arms in Sweethings Rents, near the Royal Exchange", otherwise described as "the Stationers Arms under the Piazza in Cornhill". Here he issued, between the years 1676 and 1681 many tracts and broadsides of so little moment that his name finds no mention in any biographical dictionary or history of printing. But aside from his calling, Harris deserves notice as a confirmed scribbler, resembling Mr. Wegg, in his tendency to drop into verse. To this was added an ardent love for the protestant religion, and an equal hatred of the Pope and all that he implied.

So long as the printer limited his activity to the writing and printing of ballads and tracts against the Pope and
Introduction

the Jesuits under such titles as "The Grand Imposter" and "The Mystery of Iniquity," all went well with him, but in 1679, in connection with the "Rye House Plot" he issued "An Appeal from the Country to the City, for the Preservation of His Majesties Person and the Protestant Religion". The King's government did not take the same view of the question that Mr. Harris had, and as a result he was brought to trial for the "printing and vending" of this tract. The courtly tendency towards Catholicism gave little chance for the printer, and the chief justice, after remarking that if he had his wish, the printer should be whipped, ordered him to find security for his good behavior for three years.¹

Unwarned by his experience, Harris in 1681 printed a "Protestant Petition", and was once more haled before the court and this time the judge fined him five hundred pounds and ordered him put in the pillory. This meant that he was to be stoned by the crowd which always gathered, but from that fate he was saved, for "his Wife (like a Kind Rib) stood by him to defend her Husband against the Mobb". \footnote{Dunton's "Letters from New England," 143.} For this act, his enemies promptly turned their abuse upon the woman, and scurrilous ballads entitled "The Saint turned Courtezan" and the "Protestant Cuckold" endeavored to bring discredit upon her. The printer apparently could not pay the mulct, for he was "for above two years a Prisoner”, and he seems to have ceased printing from that time.

Upon the death of Charles II. and the succession of Catholic James “Old England”, wrote John Dunton from Boston, “is now so uncasie a Place for honest Men, that those that can will seek out for another Countrey: And this I suppose is the Case of Mr. Benjamin Harris and the two Mr. Hows, whom I hear are coming hither and to whom I wish a good Voyage. Mr. Ben Harris, you know, has been a noted Publick Man in England, and I think the Book of English Liberties . . . was done for him and Mr. How: No wonder then that in this Reign they meet with Enemies”.

1 Dunton’s “Letters from New England,” 144.
Introduction

Come to Boston Harris did and late in 1686 he set up a book and "Coffee, Tee and Chucaletto" shop, by the "Town-Pump near the Change". A year later his imprint reads "at the London Coffee House" and he was employing the printers of the town to print pamphlets and broadsides for him. Here too he was quickly involved with the authorities, for in 1690 he issued, without permission, the first newspaper printed in America, under the title of "Public Occurrences"; which was promptly suppressed by proclamation. In 1691 he formed a partnership with John Allen, and seems to have set up a press of his own. A year later he became "Printer to His Excellency the Governor and Council", and removed his business to a "Shop, over against the Old-Meeting House", making another remove in 1694 to a place which he called "The Sign of the Bible, over against the Blew-Anchor", having ended his relations with Allen.

In the meantime the English people had stood firm to their religion and had rid themselves of their king, so that now Old England was once more safe to haters of popery. Better still, King William, whose advent Harris hailed in a poem beginning:

"God SAVE THE KING, that King that saw’d the land,
When JAMES your Martyr’s Son, your LAWS had shamm’d." ¹ had freed the press from the worst features of governmental restraint.

Accordingly, Harris returned to London towards the end of 1695, and opened a new printing office at the "Maiden-Head-Court in Great East Cheap", and later Dunton writes that he "continu’d Ben Harris still; and is now both Bookseller and Printer, in Grace-church Street, as we find by his London Post; so that his conversation is general (but never Impertinent) and his Wit pliable to all Inventions. But yet his vanity (if he has any) gives no Alloy to his Wit, and is no more than might justly Spring from conscious Vertue; and I do him but Justice in this part of his Character, for in once travelling with him from Bury Fair, I found him to be the most Ingenious and Innocent Companion that I had ever met with".¹

Introduction

When Harris died cannot be discovered, but it was after 1716.

BEFORE his flight in 1686 to Boston (according to Dunton) “Mr. Harris I think also Printed the Protestant Tutor, a Book not at all relish’d by the Popish Party, because it is the design of that little Book to bring up Children in an Aversion to Popery”. It was first advertised in Harris’s newspaper Feb. 27, 1679, and in it lay the germ of the New England Primer. Here was the usual portrait of the reigning sovereign as a frontispiece, and portions of the text were the “Roman Small Letters”, the Syllabarium, the Lord’s Prayer, the

Introduction

Creed, the Ten Commandments, the John Rogers biography and verses, though not the famous picture of the martyr at the stake, the words of from two to seven syllables, the Proper Names, and a catechism, together with much other material for the benefit of youth and the injury of Papacy, the whole being dedicated "To the Right Honourable James, Earl of Doncaster and Dalkeith, Eldest Son of the Illustrious Protestant Prince James Duke of Monmouth" by "Your Lordships most Humble Servant, Benjamin Harris."

The preface, addressed "To all Protestant Parents, School-Masters, and School Mistresses of Children" "informs" them "that this little book may in some measure discover to our children what they must certainly expect if ever Popery prevail against us, and therefore nothing can be thought more necessary than to teach them to Spell and Read English, and to Create in them an Abhorrence of Romish Idolatry at the same time, which being inspired in their green and tender years, may leave an Impression in their Minds to the End of their Lives, which is the Real and Hearty Desire and Design of, Your Friend and Servant, Benj. Harris.”

Apparently this appeal to parents and teachers bore fruit, for on Feb. 1, 1680, the printer announced a second impression, though the price was lowered from eight to six pence. At the time Harris was arrested some five hundred copies of the book, presumptively of this new edition, were seized and taken from him. In 1685 it was reissued, probably in an abridged form, in Boston, and it was once again printed by Harris in London, in 1695, the advertisement of this edition describing it as “A Little Book of Martyrs with pictures for enlivening every History; which book formerly found such General Acceptance that many thousand of them were sold, and it is now reduced to so low a rate that parents may both delight and profit there [sic] Children at Three-pence or Four-pence charge and thereby contribute toward the Support of him who is their Hearty Friend and Servant, Benjamin Harris.” In an enlarged form the work was again issued in London in 1715, and its compiler printed a new edition in 1716.
Ere this, in 1686, Harris had sought refuge in New England. On his setting up in Boston as a bookseller it was obviously to his interest to get out a new edition of the little book, for its chance of success among the popery-hating New Englanders was even greater than that it had already met with in Old England. The poverty of the people made prudent an abridgment of the "Tutor" and thus it was reduced to smaller bulk; to make it the more salable the school-book character was increased, while to give it an even better chance for success by an appeal to local pride, it was rechristened and came forth under the now famous title.

cannot be given. Harris did not arrive in Boston till near the end of 1686, and the only publication he issued in that year was an almanac for 1687, which Sewall bought on December 6, 1686. Between that time and Jan. 5, 1688, Harris made a trip to England, and on Nov. 22, 1688 he again sailed for London. It was between 1687 and 1690, therefore, that the first edition of the Primer was issued. Its success seems to have been immediate, for in Henry Newman’s almanac entitled “News from the Stars”, “Printed by R. Peirce for Benjamin Harris at the London Coffee-House in Boston, 1691” (and consequently printed late in 1690) the last leaf advertised a “second Imppression of The New England Primer, Enlarged.

A very essential piece of evidence in regard to the date of the book is connected with the earliest (supposed) fragment of the Primer known. This consists of four leaves, and was found bound up as waste in the binding of a copy of Daniel Leeds' "Temple of Wisdom" as printed by William Bradford at Philadelphia in 1688. From this it has been argued that "these leaves probably came from a Philadelphia reprint of a Boston edition of the Primer which must have been published at least as early as 1687". The evidence of this does not seem adequate. There is no proof that the volume was bound in the year that it was printed, nor can it be decided for certain that the fragments are a reprint of the Primer, the chances being quite as favorable of their being part of an edition of the Protestant Tutor. All that can be said of these leaves is that they are the earliest known fragments of a book compiled by Benjamin Harris, and that they were printed by William Bradford either in Philadelphia or New York between 1687 and 1700. From other facts known of Bradford this was presumably a stealing of Harris's book and is therefore an early American case of literary theft.
Introduction

The book proved so great a success in New England that when its compiler returned to Old England, he continued to publish it. In a work printed by him in 1701 is advertised at the end, among other "Books Printed and Sold by B. Harris at the Golden Boar's-Head in Grace-church St.", "The New England Primer Enlarged; For the more easy attaining the true Reading of English. To which is added Milk for Babes."

He seems to have also published editions of it under a title which would make it more attractive to the English public, for in the reign of Queen Anne (1702-1714) he issued what is presumably the same text as his New England Primer, under the title of "The New English Tutor". But the other title proved the more popular, and under it numerous editions were printed in England and Scotland, even into the nineteenth century.
The New English Tutor, Enlarged; For the more easy attaining the True Reading of English, To which is added Milk for Babes
Introduction

It was in New England, however, that its great success was achieved. Primer to printer and people there soon meant only the New England Primer, all other varieties being specially designated to show that they were not of the popular kind. Copies of the little book were as much a matter of "stock" in the bookshops of the towns and general stores of the villages as the Bible itself. In the inventory of Michael Perry, a Boston bookseller, filed in 1700, is entered "28 Primmers" and "44 doz. Primmers", and standard advertisements in newspapers and books announced that such and such a printer has for sale "Bibles, Testaments, Psalters, Psalm-Books, Primers, Account Books and Books of Record”. Indeed it was so taken for granted that copies were in stock, that many printers and booksellers did not think the fact worth advertising.

Occasionally printers in America tried to better the sale by re-naming it, as when Thomas Green issued it in New London with the title of “A Primer for the Colony of Connecticut” and Henry de Foreest printed it at New York as “The New York Primer”. When the United States became a fact, it was several times printed under the titles of “The American Primer”, or “The Columbian Primer”. But the variations were not popular, the ventures did not succeed the better, and eventually the "New England Primer" became the deservedly established title.

For one hundred years this Primer was the school-book of the dissenters of America, and for another hundred, it was frequently reprinted. In the unfavorable locality (in a sectarian sense) of Philadelphia, the accounts of Benjamin Franklin and David Hall show that between 1749 and 1766, or a period of seventeen years, that firm sold thirty-seven thousand one hundred copies. Livermore stated in 1849 that within the last dozen years "100,000 copies of modern editions . . . have been circulated". An over conservative claim for it is to estimate an annual average sale of twenty thousand copies during a period of one hundred and fifty years, or total sales of three million copies.
Despite this enormous number, early editions of the New England Primer are among the rarest of school-books. Edward Coote, in his "English Schoole-Master" (London 1597) recommended to purchasers of his book, that:

"If, notwithstanding any former reasons, thou doubtest that thy little child will have spoyled this booke before it bee learned; thou maist fitly diuide it at the end of the second booke, or thou mayest reserve faire the written copies, vntill he can read."

When to the destruction of the child, is added the slight value set by adults on children's books of their own time, it is not strange that works intended for the instruction or amusement of the young should constitute one of the rarest of all classes of literature.
Introduction

This destruction and heedlessness has made a study of the New England Primer an almost hopeless undertaking. Eagerly searched for by many collectors in the last fifty years, no copy of a seventeenth century edition of the work has been discovered, and this search has brought to light less than fifty editions and less than sixty copies of New England Primers printed in the eighteenth century. Although as already noted Franklin and Hall printed over thirty-seven thousand copies between 1749 and 1766 (and as Franklin printed an edition as early as 1735 and Hall as late as 1779 it is probable that they issued at least double that number), but a single copy with their imprints is known to exist. Thomas states that Fowle printed about 1757 one edition of 10,000 copies, but not a single primer with his imprint is extant. This is typical of the majority of the issues. Only twelve copies of editions printed before 1780 have been disposed of at auction in the last twenty years, and they have sold for an average of one hundred dollars each.

ALTHOUGH each printer of the New England Primer changed title and text to suit his taste or business interests, certain unmistakable ear-marks, or what the naturalist would term "limit of organic variation", serve to mark beyond question every edition of the Primer, however titled or altered. The printers of other school-books often inserted fragments of the more famous Primer in their ventures, but this deceived neither the public then nor the book lover now, the true Primer being too sharply differentiated from all others for there to be the possibility of confusion.

Every New England Primer, like many others, began with the letters of the alphabet, followed by various repetitions making clear the distinctions between vowels, consonants, double letters, italic and capitals. After this came what was called "Easy Syllables for Children," or as it was frequently termed, the "syllabarium," beginning with such combinations as "ab, eb, ib, ob, ub," followed by words of one syllable which lengthened by degrees to imposing vocables of six syllables. It is to be noted however, that occasionally when the printer was cramped for space, he limited the ambition of the student by dropping out these polysyllabic words, and gave only the shorter ones. This whole elementary section of the primer had been used in Coote’s “The English Schoolmaster,” as early as 1596, and may have been framed by him, but as the first part is practically what went to make the Horn-Book of the period, its antiquity may be far greater than Coote’s book.

One apparently trivial distinction in the text as given in the New England Primer, yet which had a
Our Father, which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy Name; thy Kingdom come, thy Will be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven. Give us this Day our daily Bread; and forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us: And lead us not into Temptation, but deliver us from Evil. Amen.
deep motive, is the omission at the beginning of the alphabet of the ✝, which otherwise was so almost invariably placed there, as to give to the first line of the alphabet the name of “Christ’s Cross-Row” or as it was more commonly termed “the Cris Cross Row.” In Morton’s “New English Canaan” he speaks of “a silenced Minister” who came over to New England and brought “a great Bundell of Horne books with him and careful hee was (good man) to blott out all the crosses of them for feare least the people of the land should become Idolaters.” Of this Puritan dread of the cross, the New England Primer always took heed, and no edition is known, even in those prepared for Episcopalians, to contain the oldest religious emblem now worshipped.

Usually following the syllabarium, was what was called "An Alphabet of Lessons for Youth," being a series of moral and instructive sentences taken from the Bible, so worded and arranged as to begin each paragraph with a successive capital letter of the alphabet, the sole exception being in the case of X, for that letter proved beyond the ability of the compiler to find a sentence beginning properly, and he dodged the issue in the following manner:

"Exhort one another daily."

In every "New England Primer" the Lord's Prayer and Apostles' Creed was included, and while their position

Next in order of what went to make the Primer famous were the twenty-four little pictures, with alphabetical rhymes, commencing

"In Adam's Fall
We sinned All."

— A description of the beginning of original sin which certainly did its best to balance our first forebears' very ungenerous version of the affair which to the Puritan was the greatest event in history.

This method of teaching the alphabet by short poems was of much older date. As early as 1552 there was printed in England a little tract entitled "Alphabetum primum Bercardi," which consisted of rhymes to each of the letters, and another work of this period of exactly the same character was entitled "Finch his Alphabet". So, too, a little later a broadside was issued, headed "All the Letters of the A. B. C. by every sondrye Letter wherof ther is a good Document set fourth and taught in Ryme. Translated out of Bas-Almaine into English, anno 1575". An even further development of this was contained in Wastell's "Microbiblion, or the Bibles Epitome"1 (London 1629) containing the sum of the whole, in verse so capitalized as to form successive alphabets.

1 An edition with a different title was printed as early as 1623.
Who was the author of the New England Primer alphabet verses is not known, no text of it before its printing in that work having been found. It could not have been written long before the first appearance of that book, for the rhyme:

"The Royal Oak
It was the Tree
That saw'd his Royal Majesty,"

by its allusion to King Charles, clearly shows it to have been composed after 1660. All this points to the compiler of the Primer as its author, for in other poems he expresses the greatest admiration for the Merrie Monarch, and as already noted, he was continually scribbling verse quite of the character of the rhymed alphabet.
Introduction

But there is better proof of Harris's authorship than mere inference. A study of the twenty-four rhymes reveals the fact that certain ones of them seem not merely without moral, but without meaning.

The Cat doth play
And after slay

leaves one very much in doubt as to what monition is intended to be conveyed, and equally vague is

The Lion hold
The Lamb doth hold

Still less valuable, however true, is the information that

Nightingales sing
In time of Spring.

Finally, it would be cruel to even attempt to compute the bewilderment of the Primer's students due to the stanza LOOK in the morning, and you'll see
The Rose buds to awake,
And from their beds most fragrantly,
A pleasant Odour make.

And when the Garden to it goes,
It can't be Kille with wind;
But last defends this Damask Rose,
To winter in his Hand.

Ah! gentle Youth, thus strive to crop
From off this Bath a Flower;
Turn back; behold I am ready stands
Thy Youth for to devour.

WHen Winter's hoary Frosts return,
To other in the Spring,
Up strikes the harmonious winged Bird,
Melodiously to sing.

Hark, how the well tuned Nightingale
Sounds forth her quav'ring Note,
And waives out a pleasant Tale,
With Musick in her throat.

All Life, the flutter in the Bath,
Her numerous Noses to rife,
And shall her Life death left, she thus Chants forth her Maker's Praise.

A Lamb, by chance, had gone astray,
And wandring through a Wood,
A Lyon met in Maquerade,
Who Flaming by him fleet.

Good Lyon, (quoth the Lamb) I crave,
My Life will lend an Ear,
And save me from the ravenous Wolves,
Whose Jaws I daily fear.

Ne'er heed; I'll see you first from them:
The Lyon strat did Roar; Till to his Den he came where he
The Lamb in pieces tore.

When Faw's with browning made the Rats
Their Holes quite to fortike,
She reacheth down a Violin
And last dost Musk make:

At which they came from far and near Dancing with nimble Feet:
But some were wider than the Rest,
Found Food and fell to Eat:

The Cat upon those Rats soon leaze,
Who next unto her were,
But all the rest clasp'd with Chest
And others gladish ran Fare.
All these enigmas are made clear however by an examination of a little volume entitled "The Fables of Young Æsop, With their Morals. With a Moral History of his Life and Death. Illustrated with Forty curious Cuts, applicable to each Fable."¹ This booklet, "Written by B. H." or Benjamin Harris, contains a series of doggerel verses appended to the "curious cuts" and when Mr. Harris came to make his alphabet verses for the Primer, with a frugality of mind that would have charmed Mr. Gilpin, he took certain of the illustrations from this other book, and by rewriting his rhymes, utilized them anew in the Primer verses.

It is a curious fact that of all these twenty-four stanzas only the first one, relating to Adam, was not at some time varied or changed, and these variations give a curious illustration of some very important alterations of public opinion. Thus in the earliest text extant, at the letter J is given a picture of the crucifixion, with the stanza

"Sweet Jesus he Dy'd on a Tree."

And in an English school-book of other character than the Primer, this was unchanged. The Puritan, however, would not tolerate even this use of the cross, and so very quickly the picture was changed to one of Job, and the rhyme to
Introduction

"Job feels the rod
Yet blesses God."

Perhaps the most curious change is that connected with the letter K. Allusion has been made to Harris’s admiration for King Charles, and there is good evidence that for this letter originally there was a picture of that monarch and the stanza read

"King Charles the Good
No Man of Blood." 1

Presently however the King was dead, and in a little time another king in the form of William III. for whom Harris also felt a strong admiration, was reigning over England. Thereupon the portrait and stanza were presumably changed by the insertion of one singing his praises. When William died

1 Stanza as printed in “A Guide for the Child”.
however Harris did not displace his portrait, but calling into play his poetic fancy, he affixed to the old cut, the lines

K. William's Dead
and left the throne
To Ann our Queen of great Renown''

This necessity of changing with each new reign seems to have proved a nuisance, and so someone presently hit upon the device of being always in date, by making the rhyme read

Our King the good
No man of blood.''

For many years this form was satisfactory, but finally the Americans began to question if after all the King was good. To meet this doubt,

1 "New English Tutor".
printers easily changed the praise into admonition by printing

"Kings should be good Not men of blood." 1

Finally washing their hands of monarchy, rhyme too was abandoned, and the stanza became

"The British King Lost States thirteen," 2

varied occasionally by another form which announced that

"Queens and Kings
Are gaudy things." 3

Akin to this in both democratic sentiment and verse were revised lines The letter Q for Q, to the effect that

In the same manner, the rhyme already quoted, about the royal oak, became unfit poetry for young republicans, and in attempts to vary it wide divergence crept in, resulting in the following forms:

"The Royal Oak, our King did save From fatal Stroke of Rebel Slave." 1

"If you seek in the forest The Oak you will see Among all the rest is the stateliest tree." 2

"Of stardy Oak That Stately tree

Another injection of patriotism was made in the letter W. Originally this was

"Whales in the sea God's voice obey."

In some editions of the Primers printed after the American Revolution this somewhat difficult rhyme was omitted, and in its place was one of the following

"Great Washington brave " By Washington
His country did save." 1 Great deeds were done." 2

All the foregoing were haphazard changes by various printers, but a more sweeping alteration was made between 1740 and 1760. As originally written 3 many of the verses had a decidedly mundane quality, and so

EVEN more famous than the rhymed alphabet, is the poem of John Rogers, with the picture of the martyr burning at the stake, and "his Wife, with Nine small Children, and one at her Breast" looking on. Much sadness this poem and print must have cost the Puritan, and even now, it is capable of producing a sigh, no longer because one feels so keenly for the man, who regardless of wife and children, insisted on being burnt, and really forced the court against its will to make a martyr of him, but because a study of the facts shows that the use of this poem and story was nothing but a piece of sectarian garbling and falsehood, and that all the pity spent upon it by millions of readers was no more deserved than

Mr. John Rogers, Minister of the Gospel in London, was the first Martyr in Queen Mary's Reign, and was burnt at Smithfield, February 14th 1554. His Wife with nine small Children, and one at her Breast, following him to the Stake; with which sorrowful Sight he was not in the least daunted, but with wonderful Patience died courageously for the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Burning of John Rogers

(From the "New England Primer." Boston: 1762) that lavished upon the unfortunate heroes and heroines of fiction.

The history of the poem so far as can be learned is as follows. In the sixteenth century there lived a man of whom Foxe, in his "Book of Martyrs," wrote:

"Robert Smith gave himself to service in the house of sir Thomas Smith, knight, being then provost of Eaton: from thence he was preferred to Windsor, having there in the college a clerkship of ten pounds a year. Of stature he was tall and slender, active about many things, but chiefly delighting in the art of painting, which many times rather for his mind's sake, than for any gain, he did practice and exercise. In religion he was fervent, after he had once tasted the truth; wherein he was much confirmed by the preaching of Mr. Turner, of Windsor, and others. Whereupon at the coming of Queen Mary he was deprived of his clerkship by her visitors; and not long after he was apprehended, and brought to examination before Bonner."

At this point Foxe inserts an account of the trial where Smith

"vailantly stood in defence of his master's cause: and as thou seest him here boldly stand in examination before the bishop and doctors; so was he no less comfortable also in the prison among his companions: which also is to be observed no less in his other fellow-prisoners, who being together in the outward room in Newgate, had godly conference with themselves, with daily praying and public reading, which they to their great comfort used in that room together; amongst whom Smith was the chief; whose industry was always solicitous, not only for them of his own company, but also his diligence was careful for other prisoners, whom he ceased not to dissuade from their old accustomed iniquity; and many he converted to his religion.

“The said Robert Smith, the valiant and constant martyr of Christ, being thus replenished as ye have heard, with the fortitude of God’s Spirit, was condemned at London by Bonner their bishop, on the 12th of July; and suffered at Uxbridge the 8th day of August; who as he had been before a comfortable instrument of God to all them that were in prison with him: so now also being at the stake, he did no less comfort the people, there standing about him, willing them to think well of his cause, and not to doubt but that his body dying in the quarrel, should rise again to life. And, said he, I doubt not but God will show you some token thereof. At length he being well nigh half burnt, and all black with fire, clustered together as in a lump like a black coal, all men thinking him dead, suddenly rose upright before the people, lifting up the stumps of his arms, and clapping the same together, declaring a rejoicing heart unto them; and so bending down again, and hanging over the fire, slept in the Lord, and ended this mortal life."

To a skill in painting, Mr. Smith added one in letters, and Foxe states that "while in prison he wrote several letters to his friends, some in verse, and others in prose". These poetical letters were nearly all in the same metre, part of one to a friend reading:

And now because I know the goal
That thou dost most desire
I send thee here a paper full,
As fixed in the fire
In hope thou wilt accept it well
Although it be but small Because I have no other good
To make amends withal." ¹

Far surpassing these poems in popularity, however, was the "Exhortation vnto his children" which he penned at this same time. Written in the year in which he was burned (1555), it seems to have been printed first in 1559 when the Stationers Company directed that "Owyn Rogers hath lycense to prynte the Instruction for Chyldren".⁠¹ It was accordingly issued in that year, in a little tract of Puritan writings, on the title of which it was termed “An exhortacion of Mathewe Rogers, vnto his children”, in the body of the work it was retitled “The instruction of a Father to his Children, which he wrote a few days before his burnynge”, and at the end it was signed “Finis quod Mathewe Rogers.”

It apparently proved a work of some popularity for in 1577 the Stationers Company “Licensed vnto” John Arnold the issuing of another edition of the tract.

Why the name of Mathewe Rogers was substituted for that of the true writer can not be discovered, unless, Rogers being the earliest, and therefore the best known of the “reformed” Martyrs, the printer reasoned that his name would cause a greater sale. The change of his true cognomen John to Mathew, is more easily explained, for under the pen name of Thomas Mathew, Rogers had helped Tyndale in translating the scriptures, and thus he was often called Mathew Rogers.

But this foisting of the poem of Smith on to Rogers by no means ended the garbling. In the New England Primer, a short sketch of Rogers was inserted, as follows:

“Mr. John Rogers, Minister of the Gospel in London, was the First Martyr in Queen Mary’s Reign, and was burnt in Smithfield, February the 14th, 1554. His Wife with nine small Children, and one at her Breast, follow’d him to the Stake, with which sorrowful Sight, he was not in the least daunted, but with wonderful Patience, Dyed courageously for the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

This is more remarkable for mis-statement than for fact. Rogers was a priest sworn to celibacy, who becoming converted, broke his vow and took unto himself a wife. When, on the accession of Mary, he refused to put the woman away, he was condemned to death, and was burned at the stake on February 4th, 1555, ("old style" February the 14, 1554) being, as Foxe said "the first martyr of all the blessed company that suffered in Queen Mary's time, that gave the first adventure upon the fire". ¹ Furthermore, his wife and children did not see him burned, for Foxe merely stated that: "His wife and children, being eleven in number, ten able to go, and one sucking at her breast, met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield: this sorrowful sight of his own flesh and blood could nothing move him, but he constantly and cheerfully took his death with wonderful patience, in the defence of the gospel of Christ”.

Worth noting in this connection is one question over which there has been much controversy, being the exact number of children thus left fatherless. The Primer, as will be seen, gave him “nine small children and one at the breast” but printers read this differently, sometimes giving nine, and sometimes ten, in the picture. At his trial, Rogers said distinctly that he had ten children, while Foxe speaks of his "children, being eleven in number, ten able to go, and one sucking". The explanation of this discrepancy is probably due to the fact that Rogers was held in prison for over a year, and debarred during that period from all news of his wife, in which time it is obvious the eleventh child was born, since at the time of his burning it was still unweaned.

Of greater importance than the Roger verses but of far less popularity was the Catechism, which usually followed close upon the poem. In all eighteenth century Primers examined this consisted of either the Westminster Assembly's "Shorter Catechism" or John Cotton's "Spiritual Milk for Babes" and in a number of editions both were included. Several nineteenth century editions of the New England Primer contained besides the Assembly's Catechism, the Episcopal as well, but no early edition found contains what was so alien to all the rest of the work.

The Shorter Catechism — "that Golden Composure," as Cotton Mather termed it — was framed by the great Westminster Assembly, which was called together by the Round-Head Parliament and was composed of one hundred and twenty-one clergymen or presbyters, thirty of the laity, chiefly of the nobility, and five special commissioners from Scotland, and Baxter claimed "that the Christian world, since the days of the Apostles, never had a Synod of more excellent divines". This assembly met first on July 10, 1643, and dissolved itself on March 3, 1649, having held in the six years no less than eleven hundred and sixty-three sessions.

Compared to Herbert’s catechism entitled “The Careful Father and Pious Child” (London, 1648) which contained over twelve hundred questions and answers, the assembly’s catechism might well be termed “shorter”. As a fact however this title was given merely to distinguish it from the larger catechism put forth by this Assembly, and its one hundred and seven questions, the answers to which ranged in length from eight to one hundred words, made it a nightmare to children. Nor did the elders fail to realize its terrors. Livermore found in a New England court record, a penalty imposed on an apple stealing youngster, that he was to choose whether he would be imprisoned for a stated time, or before the Saturday night ensuing learn and repeat to the magistrate the whole of the catechism. Rev. Heman Humphreys, though a Congregational clergyman and the president of Amherst College, acknowledged that his recollection "accords with the experience of thousands, who like myself, once loathed the Assembly's Catechism",¹ and when it is considered that children of four and five years of age were expected to repeat, with absolute verbal correctness, the terrible answers defining "justification", "sanctification", and "glorification", or stand disgraced in the eyes of the whole congregation, the word seems by no means too strong. Another clergyman acknowledged that "when the Venerable Assembly composed this form of Instruction, it seems that few of themselves tho' it design'd or fitted for Babes, some answers being so long and so full of great sense that tho' they might recite the Words, that can be of little Benefit, till they also apprehend the meaning".¹

None the less the children were drilled in this catechism unsparingly. In church and at school it was almost a daily task. As if this were not sufficient Cotton Mather even advised mothers to catechise their children "every day," adding "you may be continually dropping something of the Catechism upon them: Some Honey out of the Rock!" and he told parents that:

"The Souls of your Children made a Cry in your Ears, O Parents; a cry enough to break an Heart of Adamant. They are Born Children of Wrath; and when they grow up, you have no way to Save them from the dreadful Wrath of God, if you do not Catechise them in the Way of Salvation. They cry to you; O our dear Parents; Acquaint us with the Great God, and His Glorious Christ, that so Good may come unto us! Let us not go from your Tender Knees, down to the Place of Dragons. Oh! the Sea-Monsters are the Parents, who will not be moved by such Thoughts as these, to Draw out the Breasts of the Catechism, unto their Young Ones! One would think, Parents, Your own Bowels, if you have not Monstrously lost them, would Suggest enough to persuade you unto the Pleasant Labours of the Catechism."

Yet even Mather acknowledged that the Shorter Catechism had difficulties for very young children, by preparing a briefer and simpler one, that instead of taxing children of the "Youngest and Lowest Capacities," with the catechism of the Assembly, "This little Watering Pot may be quickly so used upon the little Olive Plants about our tables, that, not a drop of the heavenly dew contained in it shall escape them".1

1 "Man of God Furnished;" 1708.
Nor was the catechism used only for the catechising of the younger generation, for it was frequently made the subject of sermons to the elder portions of the congregation, Mather relating that Rev. John Fiske "chose the Assembly’s Catechism for his public expositions, wherewith he twice went over it, in his discourses before his afternoon sermons." The largest book printed in New England before the nineteenth century, was Samuel Willard’s “Complete Body of Divinity in Two Hundred and Fifty Expository Lectures on the Assembly’s Shorter Catechism” — a mammoth folio of over nine hundred pages, of such popularity that before publication more than five hundred subscribers were obtained, many of whom bespoke more than one copy, and some as many as sixteen.

It has been questioned whether the Assembly’s Catechism appeared in the very earliest editions of the New England Primer, but from the fact that Harris printed a separate edition of the catechism in the same year that the second impression of the Primer was issued, the evidence seems far more in favor of its inclusion than against it.

EQUALLY popular at first in America was John Cotton’s “Spiritual Milk for American Babes,” Mather being authority for the statement that in 1697 “the children of New England are to this day most usually fed with this excellent catechism" \(^1\) and he called it "peculiarly, The Catechism of New England."

Of the author Mather wrote:

"Were I master of the pen, wherewith Palladius embalmed his Chrysostom, the Greek patriarch, or Posidonius eternized his Austin, the Latin oracle, among the ancients; or, were I owner of the quill wherewith among the moderns, Beza celebrated his immortal Calvin, or Fabius immortalized his venerable Beza; the merits of John Cotton would oblige me to employ it, in the preserving his famous memory". \(^2\)

It is sufficient to say that he was born in 1585, went through Cambridge University and became successively fellow of Trinity College, Dean of Emmanuel College, and minister at Boston in Lincolnshire. Becoming while there a non-conformist, he was "silenced" for a while, but eventually was allowed once more to preach, and in his twenty years pastorate at Boston "he thrice went over the body of divinity in a catechistical way, and besides his 'Lord's day' sermons" gave "his ordinary lecture every week, on the week days, namely on Wednesdays and Thursdays, early in the morning, and on Saturdays, at three in the afternoon", with such results to Boston that "religion was embraced, and practiced among the body of the people; yea the mayor, with most part of the magistrates, were now called Puritans, and the Satanical party was become insignificant".

Finally the High Commission Court, popularly known as the Star Chamber, began proceedings against him, and changing name and garb, Cotton took ship for New England with two other clergymen, the three lightening the tedium of the passage by daily sermons "all the while they were aboard, yea they had three sermons, or expositions, for the most part every day: of Mr. Cotton in the morning, Mr. Hooker in the afternoon, Mr. Stone after supper in the evening". Upon arriving at Boston he was promptly made "teacher" of the first church there, and very quickly came to wield a power in that theocratic settlement akin to that now exercised by a political boss. He was invited to return to England when the Puritans gained... the upper hand, to take part in the "Westminster Assembly" but declined. Nothing perhaps better typifies the man than when on "being asked why in his latter days he indulged in nocturnal studies more than formerly, he pleasantly replied, Because I love to sweeten my mouth with a piece of Calvin before I go to sleep". ¹

Cotton presumably prepared the Milk for Babes in 1641, at the time the "General Corte" asked the elders to prepare a catechism, as already recorded, and probably it was printed at Cambridge by Daye, between 1641 and 1645. No copy of this edition is known however, and the first edition of which a copy is now extant is one printed in London in 1646. It was again printed there in 1648 and 1668, and in 1656 an edition was issued at Cambridge in New England. After 1690 its inclusion in many editions of the New England Primer somewhat checked the printing of separate issues, but an edition in the Indian tongue was printed at Boston in 1691, and this was reprinted in 1720. In 1702 Mather abridged and combined it with the Assembly’s catechism and one of his own and issued it under the title of "Maschil, or The Faithful Instructor", and other editions of this form of the work were issued with the title of "The Man of God Furnished" (Boston 1708) and "The Way of Truth laid out" (Boston 1721). In these, Mather asserted that Milk for Babes "will be valued and studied and improved until New England cease to be New England."

While by no means as popular as Mr. Cotton's metaphorical title would lead one to expect, it must be confessed that it is a decided improvement on the Shorter Catechism, if not in soundness of doctrine, at least in length. In place of one hundred and seven questions, there were but sixty-four and instead of replies ranging in length from eight to one hundred words, one answer was a single word, and the longest only contained eighty-four.

Milk for Babes compared with the Shorter Catechism
THE last piece of any importance which can be considered an integrant of the New England Primer, is what was called “A Dialogue between Christ, Youth and the Devil”, a poem relating to a tempted youth, who despite the warning of his Redeemer succumbs to the wiles of the horny footed tempter, and makes an effective exit at the end of the dialogue without the assistance of any stage directions, but with, it is presumable, the glare of subterranean regions, in place of the more professional calcium light.

This dialogue form was a favorite medium of the seventeenth century. In 1671 Thomas Sherman issued a tract called “Youth’s Tragedy, drawn up by way of Dialogue between Youth, Dialogue between Christ, Youth and the Devil

Popularity of Dialogue form
the Devil, Wisdom, Time, Death, the Soul, and the Nuncius”, which was many times reprinted. So too, an anonymous poem entitled “An Excellent Example to all young Men, being a Dialogue betwixt Youth and Conscience and Satan” was issued in London in 1684. Still a third, called “The Youth’s Looking Glass, being a divine Dialogue between a young Man, Satan, and our Saviour Jesus Christ”, was printed without a date.

None of these were the same as the Dialogue used in the Primer, and as no printing of it can be found pre-dating its appearance in that publication, it seems probable that it was composed by the man whom Dunton described as “the neat and poetical Ben Harris”. It is proper to note that unlike the portions already described it was not always included in the New England Primer, but as it is contained in the Bradford fragment, and in Harris’ "New English Tutor", as well as in nine editions of the Primer printed in the eighteenth century, it has seemed best to treat it as one of the true pieces that went to mark the little book.

SUCH were the main contents of the Primer, but many smaller pieces, in which far greater variation was shown, were used by the printers to fill in between the more important portions, and to pad out at the end so as to complete the last signature. Few of these minor pieces can be positively identified, but as they go to make a history of the book, and as their chronology is of some value in settling the approximate decade of imperfect copies of the Primer, they deserve some attention.

In the second edition of the Primer, as the advertisement states, the Prayer of Edward VI, taken from Foxe's "Book of Martyrs" was given, and this prayer appears in the "New English Tutor", but no Primer extant contains it.

The New English Tutor, The Protestant Tutors of 1715, and 1716, and the New England Primer of 1727 contain the ten commandments, the "Names and Orders of the Books of the Old and New Testament" and "Numeral Letters and Figures, which may serve for the ready finding of any Chapter and Verse in the Bible”. None of these were included in the later eighteenth century editions.

In the edition of 1737 a longish “Verses for Children” beginning “Though I am but a little one” appeared for the first time, and was included in many subsequent editions. This edition also gave a part of the “Duty of Children towards their Parents” which had been given in the “New English Tutor”. The only other edition with this was one printed in London in 1781. Most remarkable of all in this edition was its printing of the lines:

“Now I lay me down to sleep
I pray the Lord my soul to keep
If I should die before I awake
I pray the Lord my soul to take.”

7
Introduction

The author of these famous lines is unknown, and this is their first appearance in print, so far as can be discovered. They were included in almost every subsequent edition of the Primer.

With the evangelization of the Primer between 1740 and 1760, besides the change in the rhymed alphabet other material alterations were introduced. In the earliest edition extant so revised the chief variations are the introduction of Watts' Divine Song for Children, his Cradle Hymn, and his Morning and Evening Prayers, Rev. Nathaniel Clap's "Advice to his Children," "Agurs Prayer," (which had appeared in the "New English Tutor") and "Some Proper Names of Men and Women." All these additions proved fairly popular, though the parts by Watts were the most so, and they formed the text of most editions of the Primer issued between 1762 and 1790. A minor addition was the insertion of a short set of questions, beginning "Who was the first Man", and all to be answered from the Bible. This was lengthened or shortened at the will of each printer, and in the Salem edition of 1784 the printer so far departed from sacred text, as to ask "Who saved America" and "Who betrayed America," the answers being "George Washington" and "Benedict Arnold."

About 1790 a very marked change was made by printers taking some mundane rhymes from an English publication entitled the "Royal Primer", describing various animals, with pictures of them. From this source were also taken a "Description of a Good Boy", a "Description of a Bad Boy," and poems on "The Good Girl" and "The Naughty Girl". Their insertion marked the beginning of the end, for no longer salvation was promised to the good, and unending fire to the bad, but "pert Miss Prat-a-pace" was to have none of the "Orange, Apples, Cakes, or Nuts" promised to "pretty Miss Prudence," and the naughty urchin was only threatened with beggary while the good boy was promised "credit and reputation". Worst of all was the insertion of a short poem which should have made the true Puritan turn in his grave, for instead of teaching that let-letters were to be learned, that the Bible might be read, and that the figures were to be acquired for the purpose of finding chapter and verse in that work, it said:

"He who ne'er learns his A. B. C.
Forever will a blockhead be.
But he who learns his letters fair
Shall have a coach to take the air."

The change, nevertheless proved popular, alas, and quite a number of editions between 1790 and 1800 contain more or less of these worldly additions.

Of these successive variations in the American primer, British editions took no heed, and they constitute a class by themselves. Although Harris’ issue of the Primer in Old England contained Cotton’s “Milk for Babes,” later English editions did not include it. But aside from the standard contents of the Primer, there were added "The History of the Creation," a poetical "Advice to Children," a "Collection of the best English Proverbs," and a number of shorter pieces.

* * *

NO account of the Primer would be complete without some notice of the illustrations, which alone of all its contents bid for popular favor from the children.

In the Protestant Tutor as printed by Harris in 1679, is a frontispiece type-metal cut of Charles I. and from the fact that the New English Tutor and the 1727 edition of the Primer both lack the preliminary leaf of the first signature it is a safe assumption that these two books each began with a portrait of the Royal personage reigning at the time of their issue. The Protestant Tutor of 1716 has a cut of George I. The Primer of 1737 gives a very fairly executed portrait of George II. In 1762, though news of the death of this monarch had reached Boston, yet in an edition of the book printed there in that year, there either was too little time, or the printer was too economical, to prepare a new cut, so an additional stroke of the burin changed a II. into a III., and thus a portrait of George III. was improvised, which in its striking likeness to his father clearly shows the wonderful influence of heredity.

The Primer of 1770 was more historically correct, giving a genuine though very crude portrait of George III. Again however, the printer was called upon, by the American Revolution, to change his frontispiece, and in 1776 the portrait of the Royal George was merely relabelled, and came forth as the republican "John Hancock", the likeness between these two being, it is needless to say, very extraordinary considering that they were representatives of such opposite parties. In the Boston edition of 1777 a correct portrait of Hancock was achieved, and in an edition printed in Hartford in the same year a portrait of Samuel Adams, another hero of the hour, was given. At the end of the revolution, the standard portrait became that of Washington, and the only exception to the use of his features, when any portrait was given in subsequent editions, is one of Isaac Watts printed in a Worcester edition issued about 1850.

The changes in the rhymed alphabet cuts have already been described. One important fact however, is the use of some of the little pictures in a work written by Harris entitled “The Holy Bible In Verse.” Harris advertised this book as early as 1701, and in an edition printed in 1717 all of the cuts are clearly taken from his edition of the New England Primer.

The print of John Rogers at the stake has also been mentioned. There is a picture of the scene in Foxe’s “Book of Martyrs,” but this departs from the standard of the Primer cuts, by not having wife and children present. The earliest cut found to include them is contained in the "New English Tutor," and the identical block used in that work is also used in Harris' edition of the "Protestant Tutor" of 1715. Probably the most curious of all is that contained in the Albany edition of 1818, in which the guards are costumed in the local militia uniform of the day, with great plumes in their shakos, but scarcely less odd is that in the Lansingburg, 1810 edition, in which the executioner is given a continental cocked hat.

In the "New English Tutor" a print is given of "The Pope or Man of Sin" which was originally beyond question a cut used to illustrate the signs of the zodiac in an almanac, for it is exactly like them with the exception of the addition of a tiara to the otherwise naked figure. To utilize the zodiacal lines and letters radiating from the body, Harris added a key or explanation which replaced Aries, Taurus, Cancer, Scorpion, etc., with Heresy, Disorder, Malice, Murder and Treachery, etc., and which called on the “Child” to “behold that Man of Sin, the Pope, worthy thy utmost Hatred.” This print was reproduced in the Primer of 1737, but no key was added, so that the “Child” must have been not a little puzzled to know what the rays and letters meant.

There was a worse lapse, however, in this edition of 1737, for the last leaf prints an engraving which certainly was nothing less than the block of the queen in playing cards, for contemporary packs have just such queens. To find such a print in the godly New England Primer is perhaps the most curious fact yet known, and can only be accounted for by the probability that its purchasers were so ignorant of the appearance of the “Devil’s picture cards” that they did not recognize its prototype.

The “New English Tutor” contained pictures of Death, Judgment, Heaven, and Hell, but these do not seem to have been repeated in the Primer. Kindred illustrations however, of “Adam and Eve”, the “Nativity and the Passion”, “Christ’s Death”, and “The Assension” were given in the Salem edition of 1784, and some of these prints were used in other issues printed in the decade 1790–1800. This Salem edition contained pictures of “a little boy and girl bestowing charity” and “a good Boy and Girl at their Books.” More important still was its inclusion of certain prints of animals taken from the “Royal Primer,” which, with the already described poems, was the first true bid for popularity the Primer had ever made. Some other worldly prints were included, among them two designed to teach the alphabet, no longer by Bible extracts, but by pictures of playthings, animals, etc.

This secularizing was an attack by its friends from which the book never quite recovered, for the printers having once found how much more saleable such primers were, and parents having found how much more readily their children learned, both united in encouraging more popular school-books, and very quickly illustrated primers, which aimed to please rather than to torture, were multiplied. The New England Primer made a brave fight, but it was a hopeless battle. Slowly printer after printer abandoned the printing of editions of the little work, in favor of some more popular compilation. It was driven from the cities, then from the villages, and finally from the farm houses. Editions were constantly printed, but steadily it lost its place as a book of instruction. In the schools it was replaced by other and better books, and though an edition was printed as recently as 1886, it is to be questioned if an American child of to-day is being taught by the famous little manual.

It is impossible to measure the work the Primer accomplished. If the Puritan exodus is viewed with the eyes of the Hon. William Stoughton, who asserted that "God sifted a whole nation that he might send choice grain into this wilderness," there was little left for the Primer to do. This however is a public speaker’s view, and therefore probably approximated more to what would please his audience, than to the truth. Certainly the court records of early New England reveal a condition akin to all frontier settlements in lawlessness and immorality, and in proportion to population show a greater percentage of most crimes than would be found even in our large cities of to-day, bearing out the statement of the Rev. John White,—a leading Puritan—that a large part of the first settlers of New England were "a multitude of rude ungovernable persons, the very scum of the land." It is related that a newly installed New England pastor said to a spinster parishioner "I hope, madam, you believe in total depravity," and received the prompt response: "Oh, parson, what a fine doctrine it would be, if folks only lived up to it." There was far more living up to total depravity in early New England than most people suspect, and when one reads the charges brought against them by their own ministers, it is not difficult to realize why the New England clergy dwelt so much on the terrors of hell; one even becomes sympathetic with the Presbyterian clergyman who said with disgust that “the Universalists believe that all men will be saved, but we hope for better things.” Whatever the first years of New England may have been, however, the church and the school were at work, and what they did needs no other monument than the history of the last two hundred years. The New England Primer is dead, but it died on a victorious battle field, and its epitaph may well be that written of Noah Webster’s Spelling Book:

“It taught millions to read, and not one to sin.”

An Alphabet of Lessons for Youth.
Wise Son makes a glad Father, but a foolish Son is the heaviness of his Mother.
Easier is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure and trou-bour and are heavy laden, and He will give you rest.

O not the abominable thing which I hate, faith the Lord.

B Trust
Trust in God at all times ye people, pour out your hearts before him. For the wicked God shall rain an horrible Tempest.

Mr.
Mr. John Rogers, Minister of the Gospel in London, was the first Martyr in Queen Mary's Reign, and was burnt at Smithfield, February the fourteenth, 1554. His Wife, with nine small Children, and one at at her Breast, following him to the Stake, with which sorrowful sight he was not in the least daunted, but with wonderful patience died courageously for the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Some few Days before his Death, he wrote the following Exhortation to his Children.

Give ear my Children to my words, whom God hath dearly bought, Lay up his Laws within your heart, and print them in your thought. I leave you here a little Book, for you to look upon: That you may see your Father's face, when he is dead and gone. Who for the hope of heavenly things, while he did here remain, Gave over all his golden Years to Prison and to Pain. Where I among my Iron Bands, inclosed in the dark,
Not many days before my Death,
I did compose this Work.
And for Example to your Youth,
to whom I wish all good;
I send you here God's perfect Truth;
and feel it with my Blood
To you my Heirs of earthly Things;
which I do leave behind,
That you may read and understand,
and keep it in your mind.
That as you have been Heirs of the which once shall wear away,
You also may posses that part,
which never shall decay.
Keep always GOD before your eyery with all your whole intent; Commit no Sin in any wise,
keep his Commandement.
Abhor that arrant Whore of Rome,
and all her Blasphemies;
And drink not of her cursed Cup,
obey not her decrees.
Give honour to your Mother dear,
remember well her pain;
And recompense her in her Age
with the like love again.
Be always ready for her help,
and let her not decay;
Remember well your Father all that should have been your flay.
Give of your Portion to the Poor,
as Riches do arise;
And from the needy naked Soul
turn not away your eyes.
For he that doth not hear the cry of those that stand in need, Shall cry himself and not be heard,
when he does hope to speed.
If GOD hath given you increase and blessed well your Store, Remember you are put in trust,
and should relieve the poor.
Beware of sensual and filthy Lusts,
let such things have no place,
Keep clean your Vessels in the Lord,
that he may you embrace.
Ye are the Temples of the Lord,
for you are dearly bought.
And they that do defile the fame shall surely come to nought.
Be never Proud by any means,
built not thy house too high,
But always have before your eyes,
that you are born to die.
Defraud not him that hired is,
your labour to sustain;
And pay him still without delay,
his wages for his pain.
And as you would another Man against you should proceed,
Do you the same to them again,
if they do stand in need.
Impart your Portion to the Poor,
in Money and in Meat,
And send the feeble fainting Soul of that which you do eat.
Ask Counsel always of the wife,
give ear unto the end,
And ne’r refuse the sweet rebuke
of him that is thy Friend.
Be always thankful to the Lord,
with Prayer and with Praise, Begging of him to bless your work,
and to direct your ways.
Seek first I say the living GOD,
and always him adore;
And then be sure that he will bless your basket and your store.
And I beseech Almighty GOD,
replenish you with Grace,
That I may meet you in the Heav'ns,
and see you face to face.
And tho' the Fire my Body burns,
contrary to my kind;
That I cannot enjoy your love,
according to my mind.
Yet I do hope that when the Heav'ns, shall vanish like a scrawl,
I shall see you in perfect shape,
in Body and in Soul,
And that I may enjoy your love,
and you enjoy the Land.
I do beseech the living LORD to hold you in his hand.
Though here my Body be adjudg'd in flaming Fire to fry,
My Soul I trust will straight ascend,
to live with GOD on high.
What though this Carcase smame a while,
what though this Life decay,
My Soul I trust will be with GOD,
and live with him for aye.
I know I am a Sinner born,
from the Original;
And that I do deserve to die,
by my Fore-Fathers fall.
But by our Saviour's precious Blood,
which on the Cross was spilt,
Who freely offer'd up his Life,
to save our Souls from Guilt,
I hope Redemption I shall have,
and all that in him truft;
When I shall see him face to face,
and live among the Just.
Why then should I fear Death's grim look,
since Christ for me did die?
For King and Cæsar, Rich and Poor,
the force of Death, must trie.
When I am chained to the Stake,
and Faggots girt me round,
Then pray the Lord my Soul in Heav'n
may be with Glory crownd.
Come welcome Death, the end of fears,
I am prepar'd to die;
Those earthly Flames will send my Soul,
up to the Lord on high.
Farewel my Children to the World,
where you must yet remain,
The Lord of Host be your defence till we do meet again.
Farewel my true and loving Wife,
my Children and my Friends,
I hope in Heaven to see you all,
when all things have their ends.
If you go on to serve the Lord,
as you have now begun,
You shall walk safely all your days,
until your life be done.
GOD grant you to to end your days;
as he shall think it best,
That I may meet you in the Heav'n's,
where I do hope to rest.
